

Master in Public Service and Safety Leadership

Program Level Outcomes

Updated Fall 2023

The Master in Public Service and Safety Leadership is a graduate-level degree for public safety and service leaders in fields such as public health service, emergency medical services, environmental health and safety services, nonprofit organizations engaged in public safety and public service, homeland security, and public administration. The focus of this program is on the development of leadership skills necessary for the successful integration of all-hazards public safety organizations, operations, and shared practices and policies. The program is designed for mid-and senior-level leaders, including military service members and those planning to transition into civilian service.

Program Learning Outcomes:

PLO 1: Understand and apply the principles related to the development and execution of a public project

PLO 2: Demonstrate understanding and apply the principles and standard practices of Public Service and Security Leadership

PLO 3: Demonstrate decision making ability that considers ethical dilemmas, crisis and conflict management, and current trends in the field

Each Program Learning Outcome is addressed in the following classes:
